ORAL JUDGEMENT

By this petition, under Article 226 of the Constitution of India, the petitioner who is the detenu, calls in question the legality and validity of the order of detention passed by the Commissioner of Police, for the city of Rajkot on 21st November, 1997, invoking his powers under Section 3(2) of the Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), pursuant to which the petitioner has been arrested and at present kept under detention.

2. The Police Commissioner for the city of Rajkot, while perusing the records of the different Police Stations, came to know that the petitioner was a dangerous person and by his several criminal wrongs, he was terrorising the residents of certain locality and thereby he was disturbing the public order. The Police Commissioner also came to know that about three complaints were lodged against the petitioner with B Division Police Station, Bhaktinagar Police Station and Pradhyumannagar Police Station- Rajkot. From the record, it could be seen that by using the knife he was having, the petitioner committed the offence of robbery, trespass, attempt to commit murder, voluntarily causing hurt and also murder. The Police Commissioner decided to have detailed inquiry. He preferred to record the statements of the persons knowing about the activities of the petitioner or the victims of the petitioner's wrongs, but no one was willing to come forward and give the statement against the petitioner, because every one was feeling insecure and worrying about one's own safety as every one was aware of his retaliatory tendency. After great persuasion and that too when the assurance was given that the particulars disclosing their identity would be kept secret, some of the persons showed their willingness to give the statements. Perusing the statements recorded, the Police Commissioner was satisfied that the petitioner was a head-strong person i.e. dangerous person within the meaning of Sec.2(c) of the Act because by his nefarious and subversive activities, he was terrorising the people and was disturbing the public order. Not only that he also came to know that numbers of offences in such manner the petitioner was committing but because of fear of violence against him, the victim or the witnesses did not prefer to lodge the complaint against the petitioner and thought it wise to put up with the atrocities of the petitioner. Because of terror & dread of the petitioner, the people were tolerating the petitioner relentlessly committed wrongs as a result, his subversive activities were going berserk. It was hence absolutely necessary to curb his activities taking appropriate strict action, but it was found that any action, if taken under general law sounding dull, would yield no result. The Police Commissioner, after studying the papers, found that only way out was to pass the order of detention and detain the petitioner. In the result, the order in question came to be passed and the petitioner was arrested and at present is kept under detention.

3. While challenging the order, the petitioner has raised several grounds, but at the time of hearing, the learned advocate representing the petitioner tapered off her submissions, confining to the only point namely exercise of privilege under Section 9(2) of the Act, going to the root of the case. Both the parties, therefore, submitted on that point only. I will, therefore, confine to that point only and would not dwell upon the other points raised.

4. Before I proceed, it would be better if the law about the non-disclosure of certain facts is elucidated. Reading Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India, what becomes clear is that the grounds on which order of detention is passed are required to be communicated to the detenu. The detenu is, therefore, required to be informed not merely factual inference and factual material which led to inference namely not to disclose certain facts, but also the sources from which the factual material is gathered. The disclosure of sources can enable the detenu to draw the attention of the detaining authority in the course of his representation to the fact whether the factual material collected from such sources would be relied upon and used against him on the facts and circumstances of the case. Subject to the limitation mentioned in Article 22(6) of the Constitution of India and Section 9(2) of the Act, the detaining authority is of course empowered to withhold such facts and particulars, the disclosure of which he considers to be against the public interest. The privilege of non-disclosure has to be exercised sparingly and in those cases, where public interest dictating non-disclosure overrides the public interest requiring disclosure. Hence the detaining authority must be fully satisfied on the basis of overall study that the apprehension expressed by the informant is honest, genuine and reasonable in the circumstances of the case. With a view to satisfy itself whether the fear of violence and consequential feelings of insecurity or apprehension of a wrong would be done to them at any time by the detenu by those making statement against the detenu is imaginary or fanciful; or an empty excuse or well-founded for disclosing or not disclosing certain facts or particulars of those persons, the authority making the order has to make necessary inquiry applying his mind. What can be deduced from some constitutional as well as legal scheme whereunder obligation to furnish the grounds and the duty to consider whether the disclosure of any facts involved therein is against public interest are both vested in the detaining authority and not in any other. The authority passing the order of detention has to apply his mind and should itself be satisfied to the question whether or not the supply of the relevant particulars and materials would be injurious to the public interest. If the task of recording statements and necessary inquiry is entrusted to others, and if he mechanically endorses or accepts the recommendation of others or subordinate authority in that behalf without applying mind and taking his own decision, the exercise of power would be vitiated as arbitrary. What is further required is that the detaining authority must file his affidavit to satisfy the court that he had sincerely and honestly applied the mind for the bonafide exercise of the powers about disclosure and privilege regarding non-disclosure so that the court can examine rational connection between the ground disclosed or not disclosed in public interest. If no affidavit explaining the exercise of the power is filed, the court can infer against the detaining authority. If the affidavit is filed explaining the exercise of the power, the detenu may challenge the privilege exercised on the ground that the same is vitiated by factual or legal malafides. For my such view, a reference of a decision in the case of Bai Amina, w/o Ibrahim Abdul Rahim Alla Vs. State of Gujarat and Others - 22 G.L.R. 1186 held to be the good law by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Chandrakant N. Patel Vs. State of Gujarat & Others 35(1) [1994(1)] G.L.R. 761, may be made.

5. In view of such law, the authority passing the detention order has to satisfy the Court that it was absolutely necessary in the public interest to suppress the particulars about witnesses keeping their safety in mind. It is also necessary to show that the authority applied his mind to the factors emerging on record. It is pertinent to note that in this case, no such affidavit is filed. It can, therefore, be said that without any just cause, the privilege is exercised. Reading the order, it appears that after entrusting the task of inquiry, whether the fear expressed by the witnesses was genuine or honest or imaginary or an empty excuse to the subordinate officer, whatever the subordinate officer reported has been accepted, by the detaining authority as he was having full faith and trust in the subordinate officer. He assumed that everything might be in order and honestly reported. On such assumption, when the report is accepted which is not legally permissible, it can be said that without any application of mind, the privilege is exercised, and therefore, subjective satisfaction is vitiated. In short, about non-disclosure when the privilege thus exercised, the cause justifying the same is not made out. The petitioner, under the circumstances, was entitled to have those particulars so as to make effective representation and point out to the authority how those statements were not reliable. He was deprived of that right, and when his right to make effective representation is thus jeopardised, continued detention must be held to be unconstitutional.

6. For the aforesaid reasons, this petition is allowed. The order of detention passed on 21st November 1997, by the Police Commissioner for the city of Rajkot is hereby quashed and set aside and the petitioner-detenu is ordered to be set at liberty forthwith, if no longer required in any other case. Rule accordingly made absolute.
